Twitter Promises to Interfere in the 2020 Election HARD tonyodarg.wordpress.com/2020/10/13/twitter-promises-to-interfere-in-the-2020-election-hard

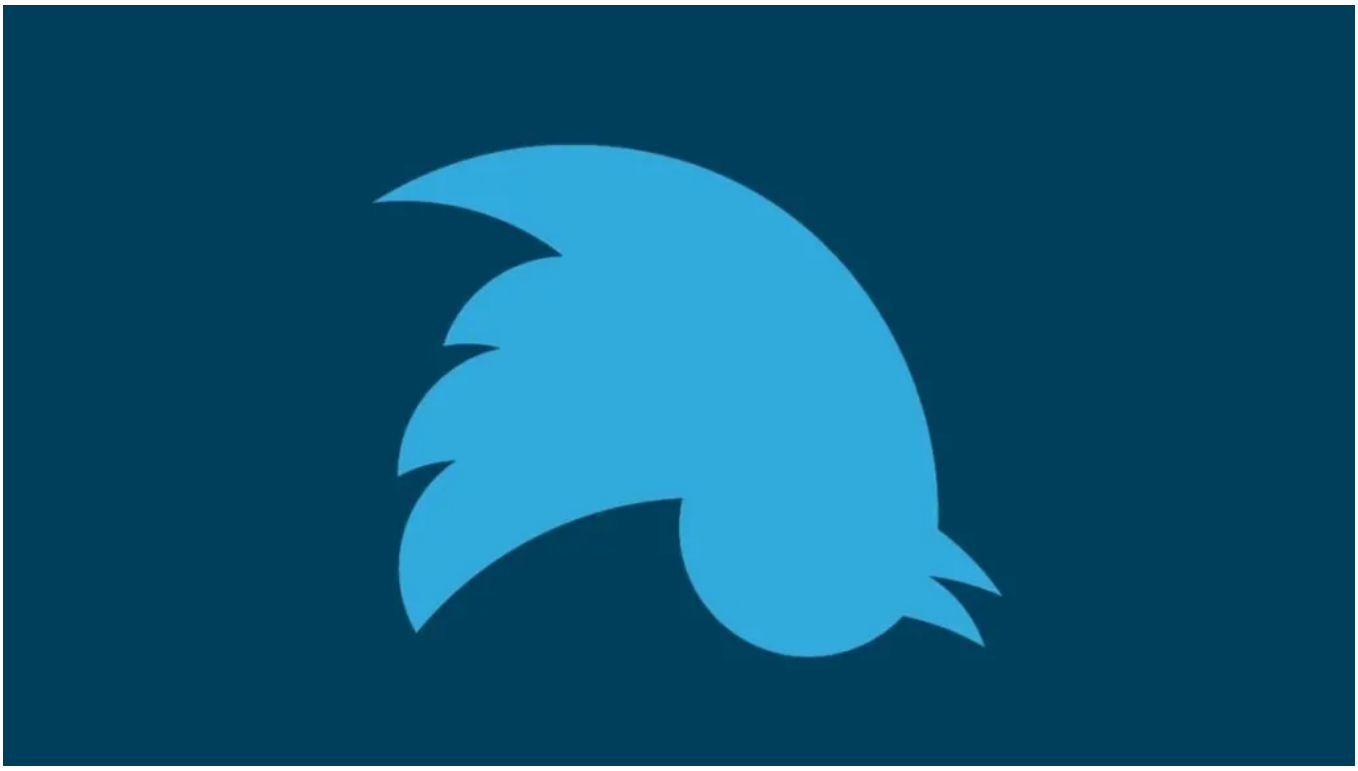
Tony Odarg October 13, 2020



Billionaires in Silicon Valley have long seen themselves as a private government of sorts, one in which they can do as please. So long as they give enough campaign contributions to congress, anti-trust laws will never be enforced against big tech. That brings me to Twitter, which has in recent times decided to more and more appoint themselves the guardians of election integrity. But they've upped the ante with new labels, warnings and batshit crazy fearmongering. For example, they say announcing election results prematurely is against policy. What about predictions? What about jokes? What about stfu, Dorsey! All this is rich coming from a monopoly known to have allowed terrorists to thrive, Russiagate to go unchallenged and banned political campaigns without reason (not to mention the algorithmic manipulation).

Twitter is not a FUCKING publisher! They are a platform. This is like the phone company sending you a message before you call someone that this person has talked dirty to their other girlfriend before. Like, that's none of Verizon's business. If I want a moral lecture I'll go to church; if I want an education I'll go to school. If I want to shitpost, I should be able to go to Twitter. Sadly, even the universal human right to shitpost is being violated.

Links

Thread: https://twitter.com/TwitterSupport/status/1314603491793362944
Archive: https://archive.vn/f4mGn

Muh policy: https://help.twitter.com/en/rules-and-policies/election-integrity-policy
Archive: https://archive.vn/DG8OR

Full: https://threadreaderapp.com/thread/1314603491793362944.html
Archive: https://archive.vn/R8fY9